The harbour lights went out one by one as the storm rolled in.

Nobody on the quay spoke while the old ferry strained at its ropes.

By morning the water had gone quiet and the village began to rebuild.

She counted the boats that had returned and wrote each name in the log.